

〈In Remeberance of Nothing〉 about projecting space concepts

genre live performance

medium video projection, live performance, music

Media Arts Studio, Fall, 2019

Jisan Min, Hwa-seung Lee

Performance

Through the projections on the floor and the wall of immersive studio, the change of spaces in this song can be expressed more effectively, disassemble, and expand the existing concept of the space at the same time.

Things on the floor are projected on the wall, for better understanding of the overall concept of the space and make them look more

The performer and the blueprint image interact with one another, for example, when the door image on the floor opens, the performer recognizes the change and moves to the different area.

Jowall - In Remeberance of Nothing

Reading the letter you sent me in a taxi
How far, from words to words

For a long time, I wrote in short that I have understood

Love, wherever it is,
hideous as it became One who used to shine
lost his words as he's a ghost
Where am I, again though I knew where I was headed to Pretending to be in lost
With eyes closed
Turning around back in the same way

About the Song

The song states the clear background space. And it explores a number of spaces in terms of a man recalling the past after the parting.

After selecting the song, we started to figure out the main theme and story of the song.

In the song, a man broke up the relationship and recalled his memories in taxi, the places where they were together passed by, but he ended up being left alone in home. There's nothing he can do, making him feel void.

Technology

We used a program called QLab to simultaneously control both videos on the floor and the wall.

Further Development

For the further development, it has high possibilities of making an effective participatory performance, since the projection can provide lots of visual information while functioning as an adaptable part of the stage. The designer can lead the audience to perform certain/specific behaviors by emphasizing the object they have to pay attention, marking the course, or even showing captions to provide new experience for the audience, and to ensure the smooth operation for the creators.

Project Summary

With a song of Jo-wall, we used blueprints; to project the space concept in a live performance.

Background & Motivation

Current tendency of combining new media arts with live performance expands the existing stage on theatre to a whole different dimension. Unlike the historical stage which intended to be as realistic as possible, the advance of technologies encouraged people to change the perception on stage, by using more abstract objects, lighting and sound arts for the expression.

In this context, we present a new way of presenting different spaces on stage with new media; blueprints.